

Introducing Government Security

Our Mission: We enable government to protect citizens and provide vital public services, by understanding and managing security risks.

We are responsible for providing protective security to government departments, agencies and arm's length bodies against a range of threats and vulnerabilities by holistically applying the four dimensions of security.

Cyber

Protecting information systems, the data on them and the services they provide, from unauthorised access, harm or misuse

Physical

Protecting physical assets, including people, services, infrastructure, systems, places, equipment and networks

The Four Dimensions of Protective Security

Personnel

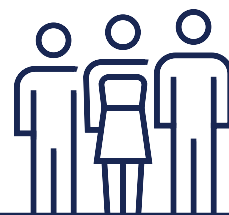

Mitigating the risk of our trusted people exploiting their legitimate access to an organisation's assets for unauthorised purposes

Technical

Holistically protecting sensitive information and technology from close access acquisition by hostile threat actors, as well as from any other form of technical manipulation

Our people:

We are a diverse community of over 11,500 security professionals, bringing deep expertise and insight to manage and reduce security risks.

Why is government security important?

We provide security for over 430,000
civil servants

We are responsible for 800
office buildings in central London alone

UK Security Vetting process over 220,000
vetting cases each year

We protect a government estate of 7.9
million sq.m

How we are organised

*The National Technical Authorities are the Centre for the Protection of National Infrastructure (CPNI), National Cyber Security Centre (NCSC) and the National Authority for Counter-Eavesdropping (UK-NACE) and provide expert advice to all levels of the Government Security Function.

Strategic priorities:

Our vision informs our strategic priorities

Strengthening cyber security

Strengthening personnel security

Building an integrated security function

Managing security risk dynamically

Developing excellent shared security services

Building a Government Security Profession

Government
Security

For questions and queries, or to find out more about Government Security, please contact:
GSFInfo@cabinetoffice.gov.uk

